On the coastline of Peru, fringed by the blue waters of the Pacific Ocean, lies one of South America's best-kept treasures. The vibrant city of Lima reveals itself to the world through the colors of its colonial facades, the flavors of its exquisite gastronomy, but most of all, through the hospitality and warmth of its people.

THE CITY

Jersson Tello/Shutterstock.com

Peru's capital encompasses thousands of years of history. Founded in 1535 by Spanish conquistador Francisco Pizarro, the "City of Kings" as it is known, was once the political, administrative, and religious heart of South America, although its origins date far further back than the colonial presence in the country, evidenced by the large number of archaeological sites in the area.

Today, Lima is a sprawling metropolis with a hectic lifestyle that knows how to keep a good balance when it comes to embracing the new without letting go of the old.

There are plenty of reasons for you to make Lima your next destination, even if it's just a quick stop on your way to Machu Picchu.

DO & SEE

Christian Vincés/Shutterstock.com

Kick off your visit to Lima with a walk around the colorful and bustling city center, a UNESCO World Heritage Site--home to many historical buildings and churches.

Delve into the country's rich past in one of the many museums around. Once you've soaked up the local history, explore the city's districts: Miraflores on the beachfront is the trendy one, while Barranco is more artsy and bohemian.

Day trips to ancient sites in the surroundings are always fun too.

Plaza de Armas (Plaza Mayor)

There is no better way to start your visit to Lima than where it all began. The Plaza de Armas or Plaza Mayor is the birthplace of Peru's capital and still the city's main hub. Around the square, you'll find many of Lima's historic landmarks such as a 17th century Cathedral, the Government Palace (the official residence of Peru's president), the Archbishop's Palace, the Municipal Palace, the Palace of the Union, and the Casa del Oidor - it's a great place to admire many of the colonial architectural gems Lima boasts. Embellishing the center of the plaza is a beautiful 1650 bronze fountain, set on what once was the grounds of the city's gallows. At noon, walk to the Presidential Palace to watch the traditional changing of the guards and just a few minutes from there is the historic Gran Hotel Bolivar, where many Hollywood stars, singers, politicians and famous authors have stayed. The list includes: former American President Nixon, Ernest Hemingway and Mick Jagger, among others.

Lima's Churches

The amount of churches in Lima can be overwhelming to a first-time visitor.

Wherever you look, you'll find great religious buildings rich in both architectural detail and history, especially when walking around the city center.

We have selected 5 of those well worth visiting:

1. Catedral de Lima. In the city's main square, the cathedral is not only Peru's most important catholic church but also the first one ever built, dating back to the foundation of Lima in 1535. Inside the cathedral lie the bones of the city's conquistador, Francisco Pizarro.

2. Basílica y Convento de San Francisco (pictured). A curious fact about this church is that it was built on top of catacombs which served as a cemetery during colonial times. A visit to its basement will surprise you with bones and skulls of around 25 thousand people.

3. Santuario de Santa Rosa de Lima. Erected in the exact place where Santa Rosa was born. Here, you can explore the grounds where the city's patron lived and treated the poor.

4. Basílica y Convento de San Pedro. Many consider it to be the most beautiful church in Lima. Check out its magnificent interior and see for yourself.

5. Parroquia Santa María Reina. Its unusual oval shape is the big draw here.

Bonus: Basilica y Convento de Nuestra Señora de la Merced: even if you decide not enter this one, just take your time admiring the stone carvings on its beautiful facade.

Larco Museum

Showcasing over 45,000 artifacts that span over 5,000 years of Peruvian pre-Columbian history, this museum is a true cultural experience not to be missed while in Lima. Its location is as historic as the treasures on display inside. It was built over a 7th century pre-Columbian pyramid and is housed in a 18th century vice-royal mansion. Ceramics, textiles, gold and jewels are presented throughout its rooms, but the most unique room here is, by far, the Erotic Gallery, where ceramic pieces depicting sexuality, fertility and maternity are shown. Pay a visit to its beautiful garden and to the restaurant overlooking the pyramid for a taste of Peruvian cuisine.

Circuito Mágico Del Agua

At night, the Parque de la Reserva comes alive with a magical show of water, music and light put on by thirteen cybernetic fountains. The shows take place from Tuesday to Sunday at 19h15, 20h15, and 21h30. There is a small entry fee and it is advised to bring a plastic bag along so you can keep your belongings dry. A must-see attraction especially if you're traveling with kids.

Huaca Pucllana

In the heart of Miraflores lie the remains of a pre-Inca pyramid, built around 500 AD and said to have served as a ceremonial and administrative center for a coastal indigenous civilization. Visits to the complex are also possible at night, when the setting gets even more dramatic. Don't miss the Huaca Pucllana Restaurant, which offers you a front row seat to the ruins (mentioned in the Dining section of this guide).

Puente de los Suspiros (Bridge of Sighs)

A rich young woman falls in love with a street sweeper. Forbidden by her father to be with the love of her life, she spends her days sighing from her window hoping to see him again. That's just one of the legends surrounding the origins of this small pedestrian bridge's name. Today, legend has it that if you can hold your breath while walking the length of the entire bridge, which is 144-feet (44 meters) long, your wish will come true. This one is a truly breathtaking attraction in the artsy district of Barranco. Whether you decide to try your luck or not, a visit to the area will never be wasted, as it is home to many nice eateries and pubs. And if you keep walking past the bridge, you'll ultimately end up at the Barranco Beach.

Casa de Aliaga

Across from the Government Palace sits one of the city's historic jewels. Casa de Aliaga is not only the oldest colonial mansion in Lima, but also the oldest house in America, which was owned by Jerónimo de Aliaga since 1535, and still serves as a home for his descendants eighteen generations later. Richly decorated salons, vintage furnishings and some artifacts, including the sword used by Jerónimo de Aliaga when he conquered Peru are showcased here.

Barrio Chino

Home to a large Chinese population, it would be only appropriate for Lima to have its own version of a Chinatown. This is the place where visitors come to try the authentic Chifa, the Chinese-Peruvian fusion cuisine. However, keep in mind that this is not much like your typical Chinatown: it is smaller, very chaotic and somewhat rough around the edges. But if you feel like venturing into the hustle and bustle of this neighborhood, you'll be rewarded with traditional dim sum, Peking duck and many other Asian delights.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Christian Vincés/Shutterstock.com

When it comes to partying, Limeños surely know how to have a good time. In Lima, nightlife kicks off around 11 pm, and most bars and clubs are located in Miraflores and Barranco. From local watering holes and fancy cocktail bars to the traditional peñas, there is something for every mood around here. And the pisco sour – Peru's national drink – still reigns supreme.

Be aware that some nightclubs might be brothels in disguise and also that prostitution is legal in Peru. If possible, avoid the city center at night.

Here are the best bars and nightclubs in Lima, Peru:

Ayahuasca

Housed in a beautifully decorated historic house, Ayahuasca is your quintessential cocktail bar. Comfortable sofas, dimmed lights, high-quality food and an extensive list of pisco-based drinks are all part of the experience here. The Ayahuasca sour is a local favorite!

SHOPPING

Angela Villavicencio Varg/Shutterstock.com

Shopping may not be the first thing that comes to mind when you think of Lima, but visitors soon discover that the city has no shortage of stores guaranteed to get your money's worth. From your typical western malls to more traditional markets, the shopping scene in Lima is diverse and fits any kind of budget.

Avenida de la Paz in Miraflores is known for its antique shops. Designer boutiques can be found at Calle de Los Conquistadores in San Isidro.

Craft shops abound, offering that colorful handmade souvenir you desperately want to take home. Bargain hunters, that's your cue! And no trip to Peru is complete without that soft baby alpaca garment.

Mercado Indio's

When looking for Peruvian souvenirs head to the lively Mercado Indio in the heart of Miraflores. Here, you'll find a wide mix of small stores packed with just about anything you could ever wish for. Alpaca knits, colorful ponchos, handmade bags, jewelry, ceramics, musical instruments and many other knick-knacks to remind you of your trip to Peru. Just remember to take your time and browse before shopping and make the most of your haggling skills.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Christian Vinces/Shutterstock.com

Best Time To Visit

The best time to visit Lima is from December to April. Remember that the city lies in the Southern Hemisphere, thus its summer runs from December to March and its winter from June to September.

Overall, the weather in Lima is mild and warm, with plenty of fog, humidity and practically no rain. That's right, Lima is known for being the second driest capital in the world.

Summer offers you sunny days and clear skies, consequently it also brings many tourists, increasing accommodation and flight rates, so be prepared. For the rest of the year, expect a misty fog covering the skies and cool temperatures.

Some interesting events throughout the year:

January: Anniversary of Lima

February: Carnaval and National Pisco Sour Day

March: Vendimia Wine Festival

June: Marcha del Orgullo Lima (Gay Parade)

August: Día de Santa Rosa de Lima

September: Mistura (Food Festival)

October: Fiesta del Señor de los Milagros

Jorge Chávez International Airport

Situated in Callao, about 11 km from central Lima, the Jorge Chávez International Airport (LIM) is Peru's main airport, the major hub for both domestic and international flights.

The best way to get to your accommodation in Lima, which most likely will be in the Miraflores district, is by taking an Airport Express bus, the city's official airport service. You can buy your ticket online, on the bus (cash only), or inside the airport at their official counter located in the international and domestic arrivals hall. They run every 30 minutes, they are safe, quick, and comfortable. Plus, there's free Wi-Fi on board as well as USB chargers.

If you're staying in another district, the most convenient way is to take a taxi (read our Taxi section for more information on taxi services in Lima).

Here are a few taxi companies providing airport services:

Taxidatum (Book your taxi online)

Taxi 365
+51 1 219 02 71

Taxi Green

Taxi

Taxis are, undoubtedly, the safest and most convenient way to travel around Lima. Although finding a cab will not be hard, there are a few things to keep in mind before hopping into one.

More than half of the taxis in Lima are unregulated, so when offered or hailing a cab, first check if they are yellow or have checkers on the side.

Keep an eye out for a license number painted on the side of the vehicle, as well as a SETAME sticker on the windscreen.

Official taxis can be found at taxi stands or be called by phone.

Rush hours, Sundays, public holidays, early mornings and late at night tend to be more pricey. Also, since they don't have taximeters, fares should ALWAYS be negotiated beforehand.

Here are a few taxi services in Lima:
