Uta Scholl / Shutterstock.com

The small town of Haugesund boasts a broad spectrum of natural beauty, ranging from a vast and wild coastline to snow-capped mountains with cascading waterfalls flowing into the fjords. Haugesund is known as the homeland of the Vikings, as the area used to hold the royal seat of ancient Viking kings. Today, it is a prime travel destination that encapsulates everything Norway has to offer: fjords, waterfalls, mountains, rugged coasts, and an eclectic city culture full of fascinating history and a forward-thinking spirit.

THE CITY

paffy / Shutterstock.com

The town of Haugesund dates back to Viking times, but is today looked upon as young and vibrant, and as one of Norway's most popular congress and festival towns, hosting the standout Norwegian Film Festival. The town is buzzing with life day and night throughout the summer.

The population of Haugesund is only 36,538 people, but the town is the regional centre for approximately 160,000 people. This is one of the reasons the town has a lot to offer in the fields of culture, commerce, and services. As such, it is a huge shopping hub, attracting huge crowds to its commercial streets and shopping malls.

DO & SEE

Frode Ramone / Flickr.com (image cropped)

Haugesund is a buoyant centre for cultural and sporting events, as well as a launch pad used by many to explore the fascinating natural surroundings in the area. Additionally, the Norwegian International Film Festival is held in Haugesund every year and the town likes to project itself as Norway's Cannes.

Langfoss Waterfall

Explore the fantastic waterfall that has been rated as the number one waterfall by worldofwaterfalls.com. This is possibly one of the most beautiful cascade waterfalls in the world. The river spills over the side of a long mountain slope before it joins the waters of the Åkra Fjord. You can easily reach the waterfall by car.

Skudeneshavn

Skudeneshavn is a pearl in the West. At the southernmost tip of Karmøy, where the lighthouses peer out over Skuddefjord and the North Sea, lies the charming harbour and fishing village of Skudeneshavn. In the early nineteenth century, herring fishing led to rapid prosperity and the growth of the historically fascinating district called the Old Town.

Krosshaugen

Krosshaugen is a stone cross dating from the earliest Christian period in Norway (about 1000 AD). This location has functioned as a Parliament site and the cross may be a monument to the farmers who converted to the Christian faith during sessions of Parliament. It is believed that Christian mass was performed beside these stone crosses before churches were built.

SHOPPING

William Perugini / Shutterstock.com

Shopping in Haugesund centres around the downtown area, especially the pedestrian streets Skåregata and Haraldsgata, where shops and boutiques line the sidewalks with interesting products and beautiful handicrafts. If you need more than the shops in town, there are also large modern shopping centres nearby.

Skåregata

The main shopping area in Haugesund is the one kilometre long pedestrian street named 'Skåregata'. This is the home to more than 150 shops and boutiques where you can find everything your heart desires. Most of the designer and fashion shops are based here, amongst them one of Norway's biggest fashion retailers, Steen & Strøm. It is also here where you will find jewellery, shoes, kids' clothing, accessories and everything else.

Address: Skåregata, Haugesund

Haraldsgata

In the small alleyways off 'Skaragate' you will find the smaller shops and more untraditional stuff. This is where you find local craftsman wares.

'Haraldsgata' is one of the more exciting alleyways where you will find shops which sell clothes and bags from local designers. Also to be found in 'Haraldsgata' is 'Slakter Haaland'. He is a butcher who once made a pudding for the Norwegian Princess Maud, and that is the only place in Norway where you can buy that pudding, and it is of course named 'Prinsesse Maud'.
