Speaking of Parma, the first things that come to mind are probably the ham and Parmesan cheese. Indeed, Parma is one of the most important culinary centres of Italy – but this city is so much more than that. Parma was the capital of a very powerful duchy, which left a legacy of stunning monuments and palaces. In addition, the splendour of that period created fertile grounds for the flourishing of art. In fact, Parma became one of the main centres for opera, thanks to its amazing theatres and its fine citizen Giuseppe Verdi.

THE CITY

unknown1861/Shutterstock.com

Parma, the ancient capital of the namesake Duchy, has been set to music by Giuseppe Verdi, narrated by Giovanni Guareschi and immortalised in film by Bernardo Bertolucci. It is one of the cities in Italy with the best standard of living and the highest levels of culture and cuisine. Indeed, in this region two of the most celebrated food products in the world are made: Parmesan cheese and Parma ham, together with culatello and Felino salami.

Beyond being one of the capitals of Italy's food industry, Parma is also an important artistic and cultural centre. The city, features a series of splendid art works and buildings, including the Cathedral, the Baptistery, the Monastery of San Giovanni Evangelista, as well as plenty of theatres and palaces. In addition, Giuseppe Verdi was born nearby, and many of his operas are performed in the city's magnificent opera house.

So get prepared for a full immersion in art and culture, in all their possible forms!

CITY OF GASTRONOMY

Siami Tan/unsplash.com

Parma is the heart of the Italian Food Valley and one of the destinations with the highest number of typical products protected with quality brands in Italy. Parma was rewarded by UNESCO for its culinary contribution to the world with the title of UNESCO Creative City of Gastronomy.

Parma ham, Parmigiano Reggiano cheese, Culatello di Zibello, Porcini Mushroom di Borgotaro, Coppa di Parma, numerous wines of the Parma hills and many more gastronomical gems call this land their home. You can enjoy all these casually — simply walk through the city streets and stop at any trattoria or osteria. The most delicious food is on every menu.

Real foodies must not miss the opportunity to visit a Parmigiano cheese or Parma ham factory. They are usually located just outside the city, so you can even bike there and build up some appetite.

Emilia Romagna Food Tour

Emilia Romagna might be the best region of Italy for culinary exploration. Visit a prosciutto producer like Salumificio Conti — one of the local family-run ham factories producing the mythical Prosciutto di Parma PDO. Spend some time with the makers of Parmigiano Reggiano, who have kept the traditional methods alive since the Benedictine monks invented the process 10 centuries ago. Curdling into the typical copper heaters, salting and the final ageing in the so-called wheel cathedrals. Taste the savoury masterpiece in the end, of course. Make your trip longer and learn the secrets of the best balsamic vinegar at Tenuta Medici Ermete.

Parma is the gateway to Italy's culinary heritage. With many tours, you can choose to drive yourself or get a driver for a more sit-back experience.

Tasting and Biking Parma

If you are not a fan of bus or car tours, take a leisurely bike tour from Parma city centre to a cheese factory to see how the city's eponymous delicacy is made. Explore the variety of this classic cheese by sampling three agings of Parmesan: 12, 24 and 36 months.

Follow your friendly guide through small, quiet roads and stop at a local osteria — a small restaurant that serves wine and simple, honest food, including Parma ham.

Private Wine Tour

Driving and wine tasting don't mix — you are going to need a chauffeur. One that works with your schedule, picks you up straight from your hotel and takes you through the vineyards of Emilia-Romagna. Explore an authentic local winery and enjoy three signature wines, like Malvasia, Lambrusco and Trebbiano. Of course, a selection of delicacies will complement the wine, as will the sweeping country views.

Private Half Day Parma Food Walking Tour

A half-day walking tour puts the spotlight on Parma's famous cuisine with stops at the locals' favourite eateries and shops. Explore the city's main attractions and make stops for small bites and interesting stories from food vendors.

Start with a visit to a traditional Prosciutteria and try Culatello di Zibello, Salame Felino, Coppa, Culaccia and Spalla Cruda. Next, explore the selection at a fresh pasta shop and taste different ageings of Parmigiano Reggiano cheese at a deli.

Explore traditional bistros for a glass of exquisite wine. Try some street food from an old sandwich shop. Get a flakey dessert at a patisserie and finish with a refreshingly cool and creamy artisanal gelato.

Local Market & Home-made Dinner

Heading to a local food market in a country where you don't speak the language, don't know the prices and don't know the haggling etiquette — can be quite stressful. Get a little help from a friendly local and visit a vibrant market, followed by an immersive private dining experience later in the day. There's nothing like exploring Italy's culinary heritage through a 4-course meal cooked and served by a local in their own home. Beats any restaurant. Plus, you support small businesses and connect with the locals.

Cooking Class at a Local's Home

Arguably, the most authentic dishes come not from a professional chef, but from people who cook for their families every day, right in their home kitchen. Learn to whip up three of the Parma's finest dishes from scratch in the home of a local cooking enthusiast. Of course, you get to enjoy your delicious creations with excellent wine. As a souvenir, you will get an apron and, of course, new cooking skills. Prepare to impress your friends back home.

Parmigiano Cheese & Parma Ham Tours

Numerous small and big companies offer guided tours that focus on the savoury and salty richness of Parmigiano cheese and Parma ham.

Most operators will bring you to a cheese factory tour just outside the city, let you try differently aged samples (most likely 1, 2 and 3-year cheeses). Similarly, don't miss a chance to see a Parma ham factory and taste the thinnest melt-in-your-mouth slices.

Pick a tour that best matches your budget, interests and time frame. The most important variable in choosing the best tour is traveller reviews.

DO & SEE

irylna1/Shutterstock.com

Parma is not only rich when it comes to food — the city has an impressive cultural and artistic tradition. This alluring town will for sure conquer you with its important art galleries, museums, ancient churches and buildings as well as stunning natural reserves and green areas in its vicinity. In this region you will find the right balance between cultural activities and active holiday, tied together with delicious food — a wining ensemble for the perfect stay in Italy.

Baptistery of Parma

The Baptistery of Parma is a stunning octagonal building in pink marble built between 1196 and 1216. It is one of the symbol of the city, also for its central location right near to the Cathedral of Parma. The Parmesan Baptistery is considered the junction point between Romantic and Gothic periods, and one of the most important bequest from the Middle Ages. Inside, you can admire plenty of Medieval works of art, magnificently explained by the museum headsets available on the spot.

National Archaeological Museum

This museum, housed in Palazzo della Pilotta, was founded in 1760 by Philip Duke of Parma. It was the first and — for a long time the only — institution in northern Italy concerning the archaeological work.

The two floors of the museum offer a vast overview of the Italian prehistoric, pre-Roman and Roman times, as well as of ancient Egypt. The upper floor houses the collections not linked to the Parma area: the Egyptian section, the Greek and Etruscan sections, and findings from the well-known excavations at Velleia, the so-called "Pompei of Northern Italy".

DINING

Jack Frog/Shutterstock.com

Parmesan cuisine is full of variety. First and foremost, the city has given its name to several prized dairy and meat products, the highlights of which are undeniably Parmigiano Reggiano (Parmesan cheese) and Parma ham. As in the rest of Italy, meals are accompanied by local high-quality wines such as the reds Colli di Parma and Lambrusco, or the whites Sauvignon and Malvasia.

The real autochthonous queens of the kitchen are the so-called "rezdore", all the grandmothers and mothers who can make real Parmesan dishes the tradition way. If you don't know anyone from here, you can taste local specialties in the numerous restaurants and trattorias, or as part of culinary tours around the city.

Parizzi

Parizzi is one of the most refined restaurants of the city, offering both classic and innovative dishes. Specialties of the house include homemade pasta and fresh beef tartare. But if you have no budget limits and you want to live a very unique experience, you can book the chef table — an exclusive dinner with the chef in person at your table preparing your meal right in front of you.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Monkey Business Images/Shutterstock.com

Parma boasts a lively before-dinner scene. Many bars have happy hours of all kinds, often accompanied by substantial snacks and good music. For that authentic aperitivo experience, go for a bowl (yes, a bowl) of Lambrusco — fruit-forward sparkling red wine typical Emilia-Romagna region.

The actual Parmesan party scene starts in Via Farini later at night. People merrily drift from one wine bar to another, and later continue to dance or enjoy live music in clubs situated both in the centre and outside the city.

Gavanasa Club

Gavanasa Club is a must-go party spot for people of all ages: happy hour bar, a restaurant and a lounge bar. You can enjoy non-stop music

SHOPPING

pio3/Shutterstock.com

Italian fashion and food are the key themes for visiting Parma. The city centre is full of fashion boutiques: the most important shopping streets are via Garibaldi, Strada della Repubblica, via Cavour, via Mazzini and via Massimo D'Azeglio. Spend some time unhurriedly browsing clothes, leather goods and stylish shoes — treat yourself!

For food, there are many shops with not only

Parma ham and Parmesan cheese, but also an impressive variety of salted pork meats (try culatello and Felino salami), pasta and wines.

In the many pastry shops, you can pick up the typical Parma cake called the Duchessa Maria Luigia and sweets called violette di Parma (violets of Parma). Violetta di Parma is also the name of the essence made in honour of the Duchess Maria Luigia — an olfactory gem of the region.

Lastly, Parma has also a district of antiques shops and art galleries, which are located along Strada Farini, via XXII luglio and Strada della Repubblica.

Fidenza Village

Located at only 30 minutes' drive away from the centre of Parma, Fidenza Village is a shopping complex where savvy shoppers can delight in discounted clothes, shoes, bags and accessories from the most famous designers past collections.
