Xiamen ranks among China's most appealing tourist destinations, with a fine mix of urban and natural attractions. Located on the southern coast of the Fujian Province, Xiamen is, in large part, set on a separate island. With origins dating back 5,000 years, trade has been the lifeblood of Xiamen and the city has grown on commerce generated by merchants, both Chinese and European, who used Xiamen as their gateway to China.

THE CITY

claudio zaccherini / Shutterstock.com

With a sense of rich history, Xiamen has developed on the trade of merchants from around the world, attracted by its location at the mouth of the Julong (Dragon) River. Traders in previous centuries included those working in a less than legal fashion, commonly known as pirates, but all contributed to the success of a city which today is one of the more important commercial centres.

Whilst it is actually built on an island, Xiamen is linked to the mainland by a bridge. Just a ten-minute ferry ride will land you on another island, Gulang Yu. There is a remarkable collection of colonial buildings, main mansions built by traders from near and far. Today the city has the status of a Special Economic Zone, which offers the visitor great shopping opportunities whilst the local beach areas, the offshore islands and some nineteen public parks and botanical gardens make Xiamen a great city to explore and enjoy.

DO & SEE

Jon Naustdalslid / Shutterstock.com

Xiamen offers the tourist a balance of cultural and historical, natural and man-made attractions. The city has miles of coastline and nice beaches to choose from. The city does not only offer historical sites like a Buddhist Temple and Huli Shan Fort but also amazing gardens like Wanshi or the Underwater Sea World.

Gulangyu Island /

This is where the 19th-century traders from foreign countries and China itself built their mansions, stemming from the freedom given to Xiamen to allow foreign trade through its port. It takes only about five minutes with a ferry from Xiamen to reach the island.

It is recommended to purchase the ferry ticket 2-3 days in advance.

DINING

Patrick Foto / Shutterstock.com

Xiamen has a good mix of restaurants with a varied range of Chinese provincial specialities represented, from Shanghai to Mongolia. With the Straits of Formosa and the South China Sea close by, it's not surprising that many of the local delicacies are based on seafood. Fujian restaurants often specialise in crab dishes and other local dishes include ginger duck, jellyfish salad, seasoned oysters and Xiamen fried noodles.

Shuyou Seafood Restaurant /

Shuyou Seafood is one of Xiamen's oldest and most renowned restaurants. Their specialities are, obviously, local seafood cooked according to the seasons. You can also find oysters, eels, octopus and, despite many concerns, sharks fin which is still very popular in China!

CAFES

Pheniti Prasomphethiran / Shutterstock.com

Xiamen is one of the first Chinese cities that was open to the world and is naturally one of the first cities that came into contact with coffee. Xiamen actually boasts the highest density of independent cafés in China. In the business district around Hubin Bei Lu and Yuandang Lu, there has been an upsurge of coffee shops and cafes, catering mainly to guests of nearby hotels, business people and office workers.

Coffee Street

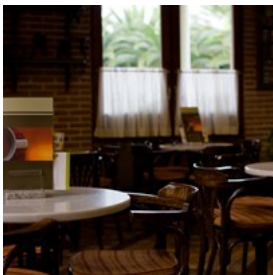

The whole length of Yundang Lu is known as Xiamen's "Coffee Street". There are about two dozen coffee bars lined-up along the street.

If you are a coffee connoisseur or craving something sweet, this is the place to go. The shops offer cakes, pastries and most of them have full menus. Almost all of them feature outdoor gardens from where you can enjoy a beautiful view of the lake.

Best Time To Visit

Given its coastal location, the best time to visit Xiamen would be the end of summer and/or early summer in order to enjoy the sunshine and the beach. However, Xiamen is in the typhoon area and has a heightened risk of typhoons during summer time. It is advised to check the forecast in advance when planning your trip.

Internet Access and VPN in China

Due to the Internet policy of China, certain websites and applications are not accessible from the mainland, which includes those very commonly used in the west (Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, Google, Skype and more). Some travellers have been able to gain access to those via a VPN service (installed prior to arrival in China).

Make sure you comply with local laws and regulations when deciding on whether or not to employ a VPN, and which one to choose (if you do, only use those explicitly allowed by the Chinese government, and only use them for authorised purposes to avoid any trouble). There have been reports of foreigners in China getting their cell service cut off in response to unauthorised use of VPN being detected; restoring cell service required a trip to the local police station where contents of the device were investigated and certain apps removed.

Giving that Google is banned in China, Google Maps might not be the most accurate and reliable source of information. Some local apps such as Baidu Maps and AutoNavi tend to work better than Google Maps.

Xiamen International Airport

Xiamen International Airport is situated 7 kilometres from the city centre and there are different ways of reaching it. There is an Airport

Express Line, city buses, a classic taxi (a 20-minute ride) or even a ferry to Gulang Island. Public transportation schedules are set according to flight arrivals, so just get out of the airport and get on the car or the bus (you can buy tickets directly on board).

Public transport

Buses in Xiamen are frequent, extensive and cheap and you could purchase an 'e-card' that can be bought at post offices which gives a 20% discount on the buses. You could also opt for the BRT (Bus Rapid Transit) with its four routes (one of them connecting the city centre and the airport).

There are two stations in the city, Xiamen Railway Station and North Railway Station from where you could reach the major cities of the country such as Hong Kong, Shanghai, Beijing and Shenzhen.

Taxi

The taxis 'net is really extended as it is probably the most cost-effective option that you are offered in Xiamen since it's particularly cheap and you can reach every tiny corner of the city! Be prepared to pay an extra of 20% when travelling between 11:00 pm and 5:00 am.

You can also use taxi cab hailing service with WeChat or Alipay (like the Chinese version of Uber).
